Predictive Services Discussion:

Atmospheric rivers will continue to affect the northern half of the West through the weekend, with heavy rain west of the Cascades and have snow in the mountains. The southern half of the West will remain dry, with breezy westerly winds at times, strongest on Monday when they will also spread onto the adjacent central and southern High Plains. Drier weather is expected across much of the West next week, with a period of offshore winds possible in southern California late next week. A slow eastward moving storm will bring widespread rain east of the Mississippi River into today into early next week. Another storm will bring a period of rain to the Great Lakes, Northeast, and Mid-Atlantic next week.
