Predictive Services Discussion:

Above normal temperatures will continue across California into the Great Basin and northern Rockies. Breezy westerly sustained winds of 10-25 mph and gusts 25-45 mph will develop this afternoon east of the Cascades and northern Sierra amid relative humidity of 5-20% and create elevated to locally critical conditions from the Okanogan Valley south to the Sierra Front of western Nevada and into southern Idaho. Hot temperatures will continue in the Mid-Atlantic, with southwesterly winds of 15-20 mph creating areas of elevated conditions. A cold front will move through the Mid-Atlantic and Northeast overnight, but many areas of the Mid-Atlantic are likely to see little precipitation. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will continue across the Southwest, with isolated thunderstorms spreading into southern Utah and the Colorado Rockies. Showers and thunderstorms will develop across much of Florida and south Texas as well. Above normal temperatures will continue across much of Alaska, with relative humidity as low as 15% across the central and eastern Interior, while isolated thunderstorms develop in the western Interior, southwest Alaska, and the Kenai Peninsula into south-central Alaska.
